

Imagine if your loved ones suddenly came back from the dead

This happened to Jessica. One night the young woman heard a knock on her door. Rising out of her bed at around three in the morning she went to the door to see what was the matter. To her surprise it was her dead husband. Her husband had died in a car accident nearly a year before. Shocked, the woman retreated into her home. She immediately contacted the authorities. Assuming the call was merely a prank from the local teenagers, she was ignored. Meanwhile her husband pounded on the door, calling out her name. She was unable to do anything but hide in her own closet. She tried to reach her mother. She called many times until she finally answered. Her mother was skeptical at first, but she knew her daughter was not one to lie. The mother of Jessica awoke her husband and sent her down to the home of Jessica to see what was the matter. Armed with a baseball bat, her father wandered around the property in search of his son-in-law. After an hour of searching he called his daughter so she would let him into her home. He wanted to check if his daughter was alright since she had taken the loss of her husband very hard. She did not answer her phone. Her father decided to check the door to find it unlocked. His daughter was no where to be found. Jessica was eventually found at the home of a family friend. Her husband had made his way into her home. Luckily he had not found Jessica. When she was sure he had gone she fled.

I was shocked and frankly horrified to find him standing in my door way. He did not look like himself. He looked DEAD. I could not believe my own eyes when I saw him.

-Wife of the deceased, Jessica

Pets are affected too!

This woman wasn't the only one to find a loved one at their door step. George had been without his beloved seeing eye dog for about four months before his best friend returned to him. Pet Cemetery was the only thing going through his time. "It was as if I was stuck in a Stephen King novel!", George told us. He led his dog out back into his yard. He wanted to check for sure that this was his loving pet and not a runaway. After finding a birth mark above the left eye of the dog he was satisfied that this was his own dog. The dog seemed oddly calm compared to what he was like when he was alive. George claimed that his dog was very active and excitable. There was hardly a time when his tail was not wagging. This dog was very calm and stared at his owner with dead eyes. George was disturbed. He found the old collar and lead. After attaching the dog to the pole in his backyard, he went inside to call his ex-wife. Of course his ex-wife thought he had lost it and sent the authorities over to his home. When George tried to show the police his dog it had suddenly gone missing. The collar was left on the ground, still attached to the lead on the pole. The police dismissed the claims of George and told him he should see a doctor.

What will happen now?

Our team will work our hardest to keep you updated with this uncertain change. Will this turn dangerous or exciting? As of now we do not know. The police would like any spotting of the dead to be reported to them immediately. This may just be a town-wide prank, much like the clown incident we had years back. Nonetheless, we would like any first hand experiences to show you are not alone.
